

Other changes have been made to other claims to also take into account the indefiniteness rejections in the Board's decision. Therefore it is believed that all of the claims are now clearly definite within the purview of 35 USC §112.

Responsive to footnote 3 on page 17 of the Board's decision, the undersigned was of the impression that color versions of the brochures involved have been submitted, which clearly illustrate thereon the fact that the surface of temporary skin transfers of the prior art are not dull or matte, but shiny. The brochures more clearly illustrate the products than the transfers themselves. In case for some reason these color copies have been misplaced, enclosed herewith is a color copy of the Team Dynamics brochure first page which clearly illustrates that point. Also enclosed is a complete new original Team Dynamics brochure (which says "Bright, Vibrant Colors" on page 7 and "SHOULD NOT BE APPLIED NEAR THE EYES" on page 6). Also enclosed herewith are some sample skin transfers two each of two different types, a panther and a wildcat head. Because looking at the transfers themselves reveals nothing (for example the wildcat head looks red on the transfer itself when in fact it is blue). Also enclosed is a sheet of paper with one of each of the panther and wildcat head transfers applied, which shows their bright colors and high reflectivity.

Early passage of the application to issue is earnestly solicited.
